This organization began enthusiastically but interest declined steadily for several years for various reasons. Chiefly, entrepreneurs soon found that marketing success was critical. A good recipe and enthusiasm were important but cash flow is what counts. Then, after the commercial kitchen in Sandpoint closed in 2014 there was no where to process foods. Last year, a new commercial kitchen opened locally and there is renewed interest in specialty food processing. For this reason, I have endeavored to keep NISFA alive and have filed this and previous Annual Reports Harry Menser
